With your name and my name carved deep in the stone Now faded away cos we're long dead gone. We're long dead gone, long dead gone Now faded away because we're long dead gone. And love lies bewildered, checking its pulse To see if it compares to anything else And two things still beating, but never as one

The Name Above the Title - John Wesley Harding
John Wesley Harding's third Frank Capra-inspired album title in a row (this time coming from the director's autobiography). 1991's The Name Above the Title. is a poor follow-up to 1989's flawed but ultimately worthwhile Here Comes the Groom. The tendency toward overblown, overlong songs continues unabated -- two of the 15 songs break the six-minute barrier, with two more over five, and none of them could have been summarily dispatched in four or under -- but more worryingly, the songwriting ...

In one passage of The Name Above the Title, Capra writes about what he refers to as "Gee Whizz!" movies, pictures that feature a broad outlook and larger-than-life characters, as opposed to darker, more "realistic" films. By that measure, this could easily be billed as a "Gee Whizz!" autobiography.
